There were Fenians in the armies of the South, fewer, however, than in the armics of the North. Though fighting, perhaps, with ulterior views, in TREMISES in Queen's Boad Central, for prosite camps, they were all united by the same haired and the same thirst of venguance against England. All confidently hoped that an occasion of rupture hetween Great Britain and the United Sates would arise and they were ready to take advantage of it. This occasion did not present itself, owing to the prudence of the British Cabinet, and unless the Washington Cabinet attempts. to enforce its demand for the indemnities already claimed as a compensation for the losses which Confederate corrairs of Euglish origin have inflicted on the mercantile navy of the United States, de by we do not see how it can arise in future; At the Godowns close of the war, the Fenians were very loath to abandon their designs. As the conflict which they so impatiently expected did not seem likely to oc our, they turned all their efforts towards Ireland, where, for some time past, their action has been clandestinely exercised. In the United States, the Fenians have no reason for concealment; they only abstam from publishing the reports of their fellow-conspirators in Ireland, so as not to compromise them, and to leave the English Government in ignorance of their preparation; but they | | THE premises lately occupied by Mezzra meet in public, and do not fear to proclaim them. | Kirker & Co., and elidated in the most salves members of the Great Associations.
